LAND O' COTTON.

By Paul Terry & Frank Moser

The old river steamer sails down to the Fables plantation Dock. There a slave sale is taking place. Simon Legree, a mean mutt, buys a boy slave and a girl slave.

The girl he throws into a shack while the boy is sent to the fields of cotton.

Growing tired of the meanness of their master the couple escape. They are aided by a friendly mule who kicks Legree's blood hounds over a cliff and after kicking his shoes at the slave-driver, puts the two on his back and runs away with them.

AESOP SAYS:--

"The Flapper of to-day is as good as the one of thirty years ago---unless it's the same one."
